Afternoon Tea

It's said that Afternoon Tea was introduced in the Georgian era. The Duchess of Bedford, Anna Maria Russell began a daily ritual of having small cakes, sliced sandwiches and a cup of tea in her room by herself when she got hungry at around four o'clock, she eventually began to invite others to join her. As word spread it started to become fashionable both amongst the upper and lower classes, and has since been a firmly established part of the British culture.

Few can resist the temptations of a British Afternoon Tea. Perfectly decorated sweet treats and finger sandwiches, all arranged on an elegant tiered stand, the perfect cup of tea and a glass of bubbles, shared with your friends and loved ones.
